Wherever the Democracy has been in control of late years it has been anything but honest. The Grangers want chesp transportation: internal improveanything but honest. The Grangers want chesp transportation; internal improvements by the General Government. The Democratic party in every State convention which has been held since the Grangers come into existence has opposed and denounced the proposition. It scoffs at railroad control by the Federal authorities; it laughs at the suggestion that the United States.

States should build, or aid in building, either a railroad or canal. All that it offers as the remedy for their grievances and distress is the nostrom of free trade, the sovering rary is always ready to stick upon every sore on the body politic.
